Q: Permission to change language of the android application I have an Android application in which I want to have one button. The application language depends on the server language. If the server returns the language with the "language" header, then the application language should be English, otherwise the application language should be the server language. How can I check this? A: You can use a preference, that returns the locale value of the device's default locale. In your preference you have to set a key/value pair, for example "LANG_NAME" with a value equal to the default locale. Then you have to retrieve the preference value and get its string representation.

Locale myLocale = Locale.getDefault();
int value = myPreference.getInt( "LANG_NAME", 0 );
String valueString = myPreference.getString( "LANG_NAME", "" );
if ( value > 0 ) { // locale is English }
else { // locale is French }

The NSA can use its authority to force tech companies to hack their customers, a federal judge has ruled. NSA is authorized to force tech companies to hack their own customers. If true, it could put Microsoft's (MSFT) Windows team in a very interesting position. Normally, Microsoft is happy to comply with government demands, and has been doing so for years. But this new revelation from the U.S. government could put the world's most powerful software maker in a bind: If the court ruling stands, Microsoft could be forced to cooperate with the NSA and hand over customer information -- such as emails and private chats -- to the federal government. It could even force Microsoft to turn over customer passwords. The ruling concerns a lawsuit brought by an unnamed citizen, who claimed Microsoft aided the NSA in intercepting emails, text messages, voice calls, and webcam chats on the popular email service Outlook.com. As you may know, most modern tech companies encrypt data traffic when it moves between their networks, and when a customer downloads an email, they encrypt it. So, in order to read the encrypted email, they need a "key" -- a digital code that allows the encrypted message to be decrypted. However, according to the lawsuit, the NSA has the ability to force tech companies to hand over such keys, and in order to do that, the NSA a1d647c40b
