Solidworks Activator.Library opens doors to preschoolers Kristen Ockenhausen, a first-grade teacher at Michael J. Fay School, has held many children's events at the library. But those who enter this new addition of the library are getting the personalized treatment they might not see elsewhere in the small, but well-stocked rooms. The library space has a preschool play area, a large toy area, a working group of 3- to 6-year-olds, a teen space and a quiet area for older children. Children of all ages are encouraged to use these spaces, and the library is hoping they will return to the space time and time again. "We have some of the most intelligent and active preschoolers in the area," said Ockenhausen. "We have a lot of natural space, and it's great that the kids and their parents get to use it." The children spend the majority of their school time here, so having the library open during the school day is an important aspect of the space. Some of the areas are designated quiet and will be quiet; some are designated active with toys and listening centers. Advertisement "We always tell the kids, 'No running in the room.' We want it to be a calm, quiet environment for them," said Ockenhausen. "But it's a great place to read, make a mess, draw, color and eat snacks. The older kids can do the other things like work on computers." The library is also a place for the older children to study. "When you're in college, you want to have a quiet place to study," said Ockenhausen. "We are surrounded by a lot of natural light, and it's a pleasant space."
