Q: Mongoose query with special characters I need to do a MongoDB query with this query : `db.test.find({couleur : { "$exists" : true, "$in" : ["de1.text", "de2.text"] } })` But there is this problem with special characters. That's why I have this query : `db.test.find({couleur : { "$exists" : true, "$in" : ["de1.text", "de2.text"] } }).pretty()` Which is the right way to do that? A: The parameterized cursor is meant to be used when you are needing to pass values for your application to query against; if you're wanting to use it purely for formatting reasons, then the non-parameterized cursor is intended. If you pass values in, then you're opening yourself up to a variety of security and data-storage issues. For instance, you're not going to be able to pass a value like "de1.text" directly into your query. I would highly suggest you look at the parameterized cursors for further information on that. As a general note on your issue though, if you have a text-search field in your document and you're simply wanting to find all of the documents which contain a particular text string, you should use the text-search module of MongoDB. It can be installed like so: `$ npm install mongodb --save` You can then use it like so: `db.test.find({'couleur': {'$text': {'$search': "de1.text"}}}).pretty()` Compound-Specific
