Want to hear the sound of a musician? Live music is the soul of Sweet Heart-Leighton, an old West Valley village tucked into the red-rock country 15 miles east of Tucson. Few parts of southern Arizona have an active live-music scene. Sweet Heart has a vibrant one. Nearly every night someone sets up a venue -- a rustic dance hall, a bar with a small stage, a game room with a big stage -- for one or several shows. In town, there are, so far, four bars and two live music venues, both described as "authentic," meaning they serve local, single-malt Scotches, modestly priced, with no attitude and - get this -- no cover. The rhythm is brisk. House music, blues, rockabilly, country, folk and blues are flowing up and down the main drag, Leighton, the north-south section of town. John and Dorothy Andrews have opened more than 1,200 miles of road since their North Carolina farm was struck by a tornado
