"Qatar's prime minister has called for scientists to play a more active role in finding the most suitable location for a planned fourth megacity, because the country is "overpopulated" and "can't carry on like this." Sheikh Hamad bin Jassim bin Jaber Al Thani said: 'If we don't look for solutions to the problem, we will all suffer... We need to find smarter ways to build cities. We need to find smarter ways to build everything.' The prime minister's comments are supported by the Emir of Qatar himself, who revealed that the country is planning to build a new Islamic 'supermuseum' that would display 5,000 items from his country's heritage, including a warlock's 3,000-year-old tent. An official announcement of the project is expected later this week." This is what Qatari's do, they're a modern day version of the ancient Persian Empire. Being in the Gulf-Arab area has given them the wherewithal to spread their influence pretty well. (Also, they are great with money-laundered through charities like UNESCO, which they used to back Al-Jazeera). As for your link to their population numbers, not to mention that most of the growth of their population was due to immigration. Before the oil boom, the country had about 4 or 5 million people, currently they are closer to 17 million. Funny how the news never mentions that it was strictly by construction of Olympic stadiums and then population boom by becoming a national destination for tourists. I wouldn't complain, my family can barely do anything fun and we got shuttles to the beach almost free of charge, and that is with no car payment. Still, it feels

Windows 10 Anniversary Update (AKA 1709) offers a bunch of new features, including a new taskbar for managing your desktop applications. Unfortunately, the default settings make it tricky to view the full taskbar when working with full screen Windows apps in some apps like Internet Explorer or Chrome. This is something Windows got wrong and something that is, frankly, hard to pin down... So we have discovered the quickest way to fix the display issue is to enter the Command Prompt (CTRL + F) and type `tasklist /svc` to identify all running services. If the # of entries on the list is too many, simply run `tasklist /SC` to minimize the list of services to only those that run under (wf) Windows Firewall. Time to Reinststate Depression Aid I'm beginning to feel better. Don't get me wrong: I'm not there yet, and as with so many things, I'm just starting to put the pieces in place.

This morning on the way to work, I read that over 2 million Americans suffer from depression. (One out of every eleven people!) That's a staggering statistic. That's 2 million people. When I walked through the door at work, I knew I was one of them, because I was feeling dismal. I let the tension build inside me for a little while, until I knew I could no longer stand it. I got on with things, and the relief was almost immediate. I can't put it down to anything in particular, but as I'm still recovering from a stressful holiday season, I'm prone to the occasional bout of negativity. No doubt, this feeling will fade, but I now know what I'm dealing with – and I know that it's treatable. Last night, after reading over the statistics, I was “infuriated”. I'm not a fan of anger. It harms me, and usually causes me to sink deeper into depression. The Depression Wellness Foundation has a section on their website where they offer information about depression and how to treat it. They outline a number of strategies and offer plenty of helpful advice. I'd like to share a few. Just like my mom – who suffered from clinical depression for most of her life. She was eventually diagnosed with bipolar disorder and prescribed the right drugs. For years, she could

----- MaxMax is an OS enhancement tool that brings back the Windows Vista Sidebar in Windows 7. This way, you can facilitate quick access to desktop shortcuts or gadgets when working with any application in full screen. The Windows Sidebar was removed from Windows 7 and subsequent versions. Runs in the systray The setup procedure is fast and doesn't require special attention. Although this isn't mentioned anywhere, the program gets integrated into the Windows autostart sequence until told otherwise. Once launched, the utility automatically adds the Sidebar on the right part of the screen and creates an icon in the systray, where it silently runs and gives you fast access to its configuration settings. No balloon messages are displayed, so you can carry on with your regular PC activity without any interruptions. Set margins to restrict maximized windows It's possible to disable the sidebar without having to exit MaxMax, adjust the top, bottom, left and right margins for restricting maximized windows, select another monitor to apply options for (if your system supports multiple monitors), remove the application's entry from the system startup, as well as pick a different language for the interface. Set a suppress key and exclude processes Left Shift is the default key for temporarily disabling MaxMax (hold it down while maximizing a window), and it can be swapped for any other key from the ones listed in the panel. Lastly, the program is capable of excluding the windows of any specific applications if you write down their process name. Evaluation and conclusion No error dialogs popped up in our tests, and the tool didn't freeze or crash. As expected, it didn't hog system resources, using low CPU and RAM. However, we've noticed some display issues after adjusting two or more margins at a time and maximizing the windows.
