We have recently shown that intracerebroventricular administration of desipramine to conscious rats produced a potent inhibitory influence on the hypothalamo-pituitary-adrenocortical axis. The activity of desipramine was found to be additive to that of clonidine or indomethacin. In the present study we evaluated the effects of repeated intracerebroventricular administration of desipramine on two important neurotransmitters, adenosine and serotonin, which are involved in the regulation of the hypothalamo-pituitary-adrenocortical axis. Rats were implanted with i.v. canulae and were then injected with (a) vehicle (10 microliters of sterile 0.9% saline) or (b) 3.0 mg/kg desipramine (N = 10 per group) for 7 days (b.i.d.). On the last day rats were killed and brains were dissected to yield hypothalamus, hippocampus, pituitary and medulla. Biochemical analyses were performed on medulla, hippocampus and pituitary. Intracerebroventricular administration of desipramine did not influence adenosine or serotonin turnover. The EMPA-REG OUTCOME™ trial was an event of major breakthrough as the first prospective study in the history of type 2 diabetes mellitus that was able to demonstrate the cardiovascular benefits of empagliflozin. A pivotal message to physicians in South Asia and others is that empagliflozin is an important treatment option in the management of type 2 diabetes mellitus. Most cardiovascular risk factors are associated with inflammation. Inflammation leads to insulin resistance, which is a key mechanism for the development of type 2 diabetes mellitus and cardiovascular disease. As the A-D-A hypothesis ([Figure 1] (#F1) [ref-type="fig"]) points out, atherosclerosis is associated with insulin resistance, and myocardial infarction and stroke are associated with activation of the coagulation system.
