Author: Windows Store Apps & Apps from UWP apps for PC Gaming Facebook ads might work, but search ads often do better. Why? Because these ads rank higher on search results pages, which means they'll have a better chance at getting the conversions. Try these tips to get your Facebook ad for products to rank higher on search. Build brand recognition Customers don't click on Facebook ads for the product itself. They'll have a better chance at buying your product if you focus on building brand recognition. For example, if you sell yarn, focus on stuff like @YarnShop on Twitter and on your own website. Create targeted landing pages Remember that Facebook ads will show in the News Feed. To create a more effective ad, create a landing page on your own domain that gives the full experience. Facebook landing pages include a Call To Action that drives users to the ad, a follow button to keep people on your site, and additional landing pages. Targeting your landing pages allows you to build a Facebook ad that converts. Let Facebook do the work While Facebook has the analytics data to understand how your ad performs, it's your job to figure out what Facebook needs to optimize for you. Creating and testing ads on a Facebook ad manager will allow you to see what's working and what isn't. You can also test multiple variations of your ad to see what works best. If your product has a long sales cycle, search ads are the way to go. In fact, they might be the only way you can convert. Facebook search ads might not be as cheap as Instagram ads, but they're worth exploring. Windows 7 – Windows 10 – Windows Server 2008/2012/2016 Preview – Beta – Version 3.0.7 to expand its reach to more countries and its client base, although some of the news outlets it runs have ventured into Indian waters. Vedant declined to provide his client's total investment, but said he runs about a dozen news and opinion websites and publishes books and magazines. He said his company now receives about a few hundred advertising orders per month and gets about 50,000 visitors per month. Hindustan Times said its sales have more than doubled in the past three years, whereas dna.com.pk's revenue has only grown by 25 percent. "The market has become oversaturated with about three to four news portals," said another dna editor. "The daily circulation of dna is probably less than 10,000 copies now. So we are competing with a lot of really big players. The print market has changed. It is more of a passive readership now. The percentage of print subscriptions has gone down." The growth of dna comes at a time when India's print media industry has been ravaged by a raft of corruption scandals and poor business decisions. "This is very troubling when one of the stars in this industry, if not the star, is blaring down the market," one prominent Indian daily publisher said. "If this didn't happen, the market would have stayed at 2005 levels. But now, it has gone down to 2009 levels. So there has been a double-whammy for the industry." Vedant's success has been marked by a major push to get news bloggers affiliated with his company, said a spokesperson for his company. "We are working to organize freelance bloggers and then start affiliating with them," he said. "Most of the news and opinion sites have become monetized; they have to make money. They sell online advertising, which they have to give to the portals, for which they get commission. So the affiliate marketing helps them. The more blogs they advertise, the more advertising revenue they get." Vedant said his company would begin a news conference in the next few weeks.
