Mark Hamill's Extinction Actor Revealed When we last heard from the man who voices the iconic Luke Skywalker. Mark Hamill had said that his next big project would be some sort of animation that would have nothing to do with the Star Wars universe. According to Director of Star Wars: Episode 8, J.J. Abrams, Mark Hamill's next project is a bit more realistic. There's still no details about Hamill's new film, but it's already clear that the director has developed a good rapport with the actor. Advertisement - Continue Reading Below "He's an incredible part of the process of making these movies," Abrams said on the On the Set podcast. "We've had conversations about my movies and his movies. It's very collaborative, and not only that, but it's very thought-provoking." When asked how he managed to work so closely with Hamill, Abrams said the actor was going for "John Wayne-like iconic voices." "He's a great guy to talk to, and they're slightly similar, because he did grow up with John Wayne," Abrams explained. "And he grew up with him, and he's sort of trying to return to that.
