Automatically Kill Processes Software offers you the possibility to automatically kill processes at a custom time interval. The time may vary from one 1 second up to 24 hours. You are allowed to choose between several preset time values from a list. What's more, you can create a list with the processes that you want to terminate. You can make the application kill processes that contain a user-defined string of characters and load string data from a plain text file. You may also add some sample files in order to test the utility's capabilities and clear the entire list with processes on the fly. Other important configuration settings worth being mentioned enable you to load the tool at Windows startup and open it minimized, enable or disable the automatic mode, and manually

Screensavers are increasingly popular software for playing various forms of video content on a computer system. However, these softwares have a significant drawback that it occupies a lot of computer system resources, including CPU, RAM, HDD space, and even the system power supply. They have a number of other annoying issues as well. One of the most important issues with screensavers is their annoying periodic nature. When your computer system starts to idle for a while, a screensaver is triggered automatically and automatically brings it to an idle state. That means the screen is blank and no user activity is being shown. But how can you know whether your computer system has actually been idle for a while? There are quite a number of effective ways to check whether your computer system has been idle for a while. In this way, you will find out whether it is time to shut down the computer or let it idle for a while. If your system is to be shut down, you can do so immediately. That way, there will be no more screensaver triggering. Using free Windows screensaver monitoring software will ensure that you don't have to waste your time manually checking whether your computer system is idle or not. There are many monitoring tools that you can use to keep an eye on your computer system all the time. So, let's have a look at a few top free Windows screensaver monitoring software. Monit Monit is a great and free screen saver monitoring software that you can use to check whether your computer system is idle. It is a robust software that can help you monitor and keep an eye on your computer system at all times. Monit has an intuitive GUI and is easy to use. You can monitor CPU activity, RAM usage, HDD space, system uptime, and many other performance issues. It runs silently in the background of your computer system and provides you real-time information regarding the health of your system. Monit can run as a service or as an application. If you decide to make it run as a service, you need to create an alert by adding it to the Windows Scheduling tool. The free version is great for a single PC. The paid version of the tool has a limited number of criteria you can monitor. The free version of the tool has its downsides as well. It doesn't have the capability to automatically shut down the computer system. It is very useful when you have to work on a long document, spreadsheet or presentation. That way, you will have all the time and the resources you need. But when you are done with the work, you can simply shut down the computer system without worrying about the automatic screensaver triggering. You can check the following link to download and install Monit on Windows:
