Lajmi, A .Q: Executing Rust code from Mac command line I'm trying to execute Rust code on the command line. I run `rustc --print target-list` to get the binaries that are already compiled and saved in the `target/` folder.

Then I run `rustc --print target-list` to build those binaries (it works because `target/bin/rustc --print target-list` already does that for me). But now I want to execute that code. How do I do that? A: The general rule is: You're only allowed to use the shell to interpret arbitrary (freeform) text not (re-)compiled Rust code.

So, for example, to run the `.cargo/bin/` executable you're executing you can do: `cargo -- --` Note the trailing whitespace -- this is essential. If you want to use a different executable, that you'd prefer to access in `$PATH`, you can use

`--bin: cargo`

`--bin=my_executable --`

Note that unless you can remove that trailing whitespace, it's not possible to actually pass a file to the cargo runner from the shell. Retrieval of
