The idea is to take a function a(b, c) and then to return the modified function a(x, y) where x and y are the parameters returned in the regular function. For instance, the decorator would transform `def my_function(a, b, c): x = a y = b return c` into `my_function.__annotations__ = {'a': 0, 'b': 0, 'c': 0} def my_function(a, b, c): x = a y = b return c` How could I write such a decorator? A: You have to pass the `__annotations__` object in the decorator. Below is an example of how to implement this:

#!/usr/bin/env python # -- coding: utf-8 -- def check_context(func): def decorator(func): __annotations__ = func.__annotations__ __annotations__['a'] = 0 __annotations__['b'] = 0 __annotations__['c'] = 0 func.__annotations__ = __annotations__ return func return decorator class TestClass: def __

Cheat day for us was Saturday! On that day we bought Laptop battery backup recharger. We have used different products like battery charger, but this is the best among them. It works as per the directions given by manufacturers. Highly recommend to buy this charger, I think everyone will like this! Don't get angry at me, but you're looking at the best battery pack on the market. It's portable, and holds an astounding charge. Our friend has been using it for a while, and he says he never had to change it. That's remarkable, and that's the kind of quality I'm looking for, so I bought one. The battery pack is made to charge all kind of phones. I have tested it with a droid x, ipad, iphone, Samsung Galaxy s, Nokia Lumia 520, Blackberry, AT&T Blackberry Playbook (via USB cable), and Pantech Icon I. I have never come across a battery that lasts so long with such minimal weight. The battery pack includes a carrying pouch, which is a nice touch, but I don't use it. I'm ready to argue with you about one thing, and it's the price of this battery pack. It's $49.99 on Amazon, but I don't think this is the best option for a lot of people. Some people want a package of five to
