Patchwork is a messaging and sharing application. With it, you can connect to different hubs, communicate with your friends and subscribe to your favorite channels for discussions on the topics you are interested in. It happens to all of us at some point that we are "bothered" by messages from people we don't know or don't want to talk to. This is a thing of the past in Patchwork, as you can only be contacted by people you follow. Speaking of contacting people, if you and your friend are on the same Wi-Fi network, you have the option of syncing your messages. The program can also be used when offline, as the data you need from it is stored on your device.

It isn't the fastest way to communicate, though This application does have its good and unique parts, but it is not quite the perfect messaging service. It has some aspects that make messaging slower than with other platforms. Every time you want to send a private message to someone, you must always include their name in the message. If you do not do it, they will not receive it. It's not the hardest thing in the world to do, but it does add a few extra seconds to sending someone a message. Also, before you send any message, you must first review it and only then you can send it. I can understand the use of this feature, but, again, it just slows everything down.
