I never liked the new PP menu in the apps. For a normal user this was very hard to locate the function he wanted. Another thing is Tiger make VNC clients only for Mac. Most of PC users don't use Mac. They think it is not a good move. If Tiger can't think of an alternative for Win users for a Win only app, they should make it so that it works on the Mac too. If they can't make a special client, then they should at least allow Mac users to run their own VNC clients. I agree with you on the Mac and Win issue. Mac users have Tiger's VNC to fill that gap, but they don't want to pay for the program. They think it should be free like they don't have to pay for Win updates. I know I am not the only one who cannot stand the new interface. When Tiger first came out I was all for it. It was a better alternative to the old PPS (I really hope Microsoft never goes back to that old PPS). But now it's just way to hard to find the function I want. I think the company should come up with a new UI or a new version of the PPS (which I don't see why they don't have anyway). When Tiger first came out, it was a better alternative to the old PPS. However, I haven't been using PPS in quite some time. I don't use it at all anymore. I will take Tiger anytime over PPS. I am just glad

All files are scanned instantly. The smallest (and maybe fastest) Windows Search Appliance, FileSpider is perfect for a quick search through the file system without the need to install any Windows Search Plug-in. When you run FileSpider for the first time, it will install all necessary components. But FileSpider is very smart, because it will use the first drive, which is probably the system drive, to create the index. For each volume, FileSpider will: * Identify the volume type, if it is a disk, partition, or drive letter * Detect its size, and check if it is in use * List files and folders from the first to the last * Check the date on each file * Create an index But FileSpider is even smarter, because it will use the first drive, which is probably the system drive, to create the index. For each volume, FileSpider will: * Detect its size, and check if it is in use * List files and folders from the first to the last * Check the date on each file Be sure to close the volume creation screen when done, because you can end up waiting a lot of time, since there's no prompt to tell you import is done, and the window doesn't automatically disappear either. However, adding a rich source can take some time, and you may see the progress slider quickly filling in before it turns gray again. It is possible to add new volumes by opening FileSpider, clicking on File -> Add, browsing to the source folder, and pressing ok. Once you associate directories with new volumes, they're all shown in a tree list in the previously empty main window. You're free to expand them, with a cool animation getting triggered for this action. There's a built-in search engine to quickly locate items of interest in your volumes. Unfortunately, the application scans the location and indexes it with files and folders identified in the first run. This means that removing, changing, or adding something new to the actual source doesn't have an effect on your volumes, and there's no option to refresh your databases to keep them updated. A few last words All things considered, we come to the conclusion that Tigersoft FileSpider comes with good intentions, and wants to help you easily catalog files and folders on your computer to find them in the nick of time. However, with no refresh of the database, you need to make sure that the source suffers no changes whatsoever. Tigersoft FileSpider 0.
