Prostaglandin E2 and clonidine inhibit LHRH release in fetal sheep. The aim of this study was to investigate the effects of intravenous infusion of prostaglandin E2 (PGE2) on plasma LH and FSH concentrations and the plasma concentrations of LHRH, LH and FSH in the fetal sheep. Fetal and maternal fluids were collected under intravascular catheters. Seven pregnant ewes were infused with saline and a second ewe was infused with PGE2. PGE2 was infused in a stepwise manner between 20 and 160 ng/kg per minute, with each infusion lasting 15 min. Six hours following the start of infusion, LH and FSH levels were higher (P less than 0.05) in the PGE2-treated ewes than in controls. A significant positive correlation was found between plasma LH and PGE2 ( $r = 0.69$ , P less than 0.05). In the ewe treated with PGE2, plasma LH levels decreased significantly with a rise in plasma FSH concentrations. Clonidine (10 micrograms per min) induced the same changes in plasma LH and FSH as PGE2. Intravenous infusion of LHRH induced a significant increase in plasma LH concentrations (P less than 0.05). Plasma LH concentrations were significantly higher (P less than 0.01) at any time point following LHRH infusion in PGE2-treated fetal sheep. These results demonstrate that (a) PGE2 inhibits LHRH release in fetal sheep and (b) a rise in plasma LH levels induced by clonidine does not require the presence of LHRH in the fetal sheep. The data imply that PGE2 and clonidine induce changes in LHRH release from the brain to the pituitary and the anterior pituitary gland. The results also suggest that in fetal sheep, the neural inhibition of LHRH release may be necessary for the development
