The game simply brings back the classic experience of breaking out from prison in a central-American type of dungeon by running across a rectangular room and escaping, while avoiding deadly traps, explosive barrels and noxious fumes. And what about the more exciting bonus game, which involves you facing guards with fully automatic weapons and your only hope is to survive and beat them to a pulp? :) How to play: - Move your finger to the screen to control the running speed and direction, by tapping the screen several times. A blue line will show up on the floor as the escape path. - As soon as you touch any obstruction, a barrier will pop up (impossible to cross), and your running distance will be limited. If you miss the obstacle by a narrow margin, you will get stuck. - Tapping the screen quickly will result in a bonus segment for beating up the last armed guard, which increases your multiplier. Level Guide: - 7 Levels in this game. When you enter the first section of the game, you will be in level 7. Each level consists of 2 rounds, so there will be 3 rounds in total. After level 3, there will be another 3 rounds in each section (thus 6 rounds in total). - Each level includes 8 hazardous obstacles in the form of explosive barrels, poisonous gas and so on. These represent a fatal dilemma to you, so a well-timed touch on the screen is the only way to escape. ## What's new in Hands Of Wisp:

and the giant citrine dragon I'm not sure what it is about drinking beer in the evening and turning into another monster. Perhaps it is living the life of a tyke and going to bed to play sleeping babies. Perhaps it's the lack of common sense and poor hygiene on the part of those around you. But I've been turned into a giant green egg. Here's how it happened: Last night a new bottle of beer appeared in my possession. Before I could put it to any good use a Wisp appeared. He seemed normal except he had a blue hue and had giant hands. I drank the new brew and he transported me to a friendly elemental forest. He said I needed to hide for a while and that I should awake once the sun returned. After a couple of hours the Wisp went away and I awoke to realize that by the time I woke up the sun had set and it was dark in the forest. I was happy and anxious to be away from Wisp's powerful hands and stumbled around until I saw a softly-lit cottage. I approached the cottage and knocked on the door. A white broughte answered, "knocking a winged voice called on top of her head. The fairy wedged a wooden door into the opening and we went inside. She led me to a cot bed and left me to rest. When I awoke the sun had risen and I was still in the cottage. Outside it was a hot and humid morning. I left the cottage and strode away from the cottage. At this time I heard the wisp's head a distant voice calling "he's leaving the forest." I looked to my right and saw him flying away. The elemental forest had faded from view when I began to feel trapped. Wisp had transported me there. Without the forest around I'm trapped in the elemental plane of air with only what I had on my person. I continued to look around and found a spiky tress of rocks following behind my head when I looked behind me the elemental forest faded from view. I looked forward and saw an ocean line. The ocean line was split by a stone path that led to the island I'm on. I decided that if I would chance the life at the end of the ocean I'd be
