Q: How to make a div fill out from the left side of the screen I have a row of divs that I want to be able to expand and contract individually but retain the center position and fill 100% of the screen. I've done a search on how to do this but could only find how to get the screen to expand and shrink and not retain a centered position. Here is a picture:

A: You can make the container's width and height 100% for this to work, but I suggest you to use absolute and relative positioning. HTML: CSS: .container { width: 100%; height: 100%; position:relative; /* parent's position is relative */ } .item { width:25%; /* or whatever you want, but be sure that the total number of.items is divisible by 25% */ position:absolute; /* this will keep them in place, but you can change their position by changing their left and top CSS properties */ left:0; top:0; } You can try this fiddle. Shrek Forever After (2010), Ice Age: Continental Drift (2012), Toy Story 4 (2019). The Space Generation Contest and the Global Design Challenge are both 14-year-old organizations with a mission of letting 10,000 young people from around the world get hands-on experience with space. On Saturday, kids aged 9 to 19 joined the agency in Washington, D.C. to learn about the space agency and get hands-on experience creating their own rocket. It's all part of NASA's Space Generation Program which helps leaders, scientists, engineers and space advocates inspire and support the next generation of explorers. Using Lego, the kids are exploring rockets, and the rockets they create will be the basis for their challenge projects. But more than this, the kids are learning about what it means to be a leader and a scientist. NASA is hoping these sorts of projects will inspire these young minds to take on projects of their own. The winner of the contest is the child that has the best design, with the most complexity. Following the contest, the top prize winner will then go on to become the “Lego for space” agent where they will be in charge of creating their own Lego set inspired by one of NASA’s Space Generation programs. The contest was judged by USA TODAY’s own Jessica Jacques. For a full list of winners, you can check out the USA TODAY Awards.
