IDIOTIC is a fast-paced single player FPS where you can switch between alternate dimensions at will. Wreak chaos and improve your character as you move at break-neck speed. Switch between alternate dimensions at will As you are torn between the fractures of reality, you can switch between The Top and The Alt. The Top has your "normal" reality with flying, deadly robots, and people in suits trying to kill you, but also has the rewards and objectives. The Alt is a darker, deadlier version of the top with corrupted zombies and the Neon Stringler trying to kill you, but you can regain health and reposition from The Top there. Use them both to achieve your goals. Wallrun, double jump and slide around in procedural levels Every game mode requires the need to use your advanced movement and your dimension switching abilities. Raid the ever-changing city and cause chaos. But if you're not fast enough, you'll find chaos upon you too! Use either a gun or a melee weapon Each are fit for a different playstyle, with their own Temporary Boosts you can find across the map. Bonk/shoot your enemies to death! Buy permanent boosts with the coins you find In every combat game mode you can find coins as a reward, either for your speed or ability to survive long enough. Use them to buy permanent boosts and improve your chances of survival. To summarize, IDIOTIC has: Alternate dimensions (only one is called The Alt though) Stupid Weapons Fun movement High pace Low IQ Made by a noob solo developer that tries his hardest. What's new in Orborun:

? I recently stumbled on to one of these Tiger tanks at a pawn shop in the German state of Saxony for 400€, an incredible bargain! I researched to find out more information about this awesome 53 cm minelaying WWII tank and I found out that it does not exist anymore. Sadly this one was the only Tiger that came my way! I love the story of this tank, and couldn't be happier to have had it in my collection. So here is the AO Research #59 Tiger Tank, AKA Peterfeld Tiger, AKA Tiger Steel Skelton, AKA Tiger Tank 59? Images - as seen at "52 Weeks" In the early years the Tiger Tank was seen in some extreme close-up action. This one sits on a dug-in emplacement, ready for the first axis advance towards the River Bug. Note the camouflage painted undercarriage, and another one that is missing several machine gun positions. You can find out more information about this Tiger here. It seems unlikely that this tank existed. Only one is known to exist, and until now no one has proven the existence of the second one. The first sighting of this tank was when the 16th Panzer troops came across a second tank right by a position in the town of Radau, with what is presumed to be a Yugoslavian tank crew. They had a small problem though, because the German tank was extremely dirty and the local inhabitants told them that they weren't even allowed to wipe their own tanks up for two years after the armistice. The crew of this second tank did not report this to their headquarters, and soon moved on. It was only in 1943 that the other 8th Army's staff noticed this second tank. Anticipating a possible breakthrough by the first Russian full-changers, the staff requested permission to fire on the tank. A joint East and West planning staff quickly designed a special version of the Tiger II. The wildcat arrived in February 1944. The Tiger was spotted once more in August 1944 when the 1st SS Panzer Division tank loyals from the Danube River were deployed in support of 8th Army's 8th Panzer Reserve for both local and counter-thrust operations. Until then there was no sign of the vehicle. In October 1944, Soviet tanks engaged in the counterattack in Yugoslavia against the German retreat after the fall of the city Belgrade. This "horse face" marks a later release of the Tiger tank by
