The most frequently used features of Photoshop are the Tool Palette, the Organizer, the history list, layers, and channels. But as you'll see in this chapter, you can find other ways to work with layers, including the use of the Adjustment and Mask modules, as well as the Levels feature. In addition, you can work with the Paint Bucket tool (Cmd+R), layer masks (graphics you can paint on to a layer to mask its contents), and other image editing tools. The next two chapters provide more details on these tools. What's New in Photoshop CS2? The Corel Graphics Gallery (see Chapter 14) contains information about the specific new features in Photoshop CS2. But the remainder of this section highlights some of the most significant changes in Photoshop CS2. You can easily add a background via the Backgrounds/Shadows/Midtones/Highlights command. Plus, you can add a background photo or deselect a picture element to prevent it from appearing on the background. Just as the previous version had the capability to go direct from a JPEG to a grayscale image, the CS2 version has the capability to go directly from a grayscale image to a CMYK image. One neat thing is that you can still export a grayscale image as a JPEG in CS2, for printing. One of the biggest changes in Photoshop CS2, however, is the new content-aware fill. This means that when you paint over an image, even with a simple white brush, the information in that area of the image is analyzed and then automatically filled in, without a trace of the original color. You can use this feature to create a toned black-and-white version of an image. The new feature of content-aware fill is extremely useful to a huge group of people out there — children who want to paint their drawings over and over again without the colors overlapping. The new option that allows the placement of items or paths on a polygon shape like a circle or a square is a huge timesaver for creating panoramic images, which are of course a common panorama-shot technique. In CS2, if you select the Rectangular or Elliptical marquee, the first item added is automatically placed on a polygon shape. Select More from the Basic panel and you get a flyout menu of the polygon shapes, and you can then add additional items to the selected shape. See

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to the coating or otherwise decorating of a pre-curved shape of composite material, a process for producing the same and an object coated by the process. 2. Prior Art Heretofore, for example, the art described in Japanese patent publication No. 20,214/1974 or U.S. Pat. No. 3,973,489 has been known as relating to the coating of a pre-curved shape of composite material. In these prior-art processes, a pre-curved shape of composite material is rotated about its axis at a fixed speed in a coating bath into which the pre-curved shape is dipped, or in a rotating drum, and a liquid coating material of high viscosity such as a natural gum is applied on the rotating pre-curved shape, thus obtaining a coating on the pre-curved shape. However, when the pre-curved shape of composite material is rotated at a fixed speed in the coating bath or rotating drum, turbulence occurs on the pre-curved shape in the coating bath or rotating drum, and thus it is difficult to obtain a desirable film. It is an object of the present invention to improve the process for producing the pre-curved shape of composite material, to achieve a desirable film, uniform in thickness, in which a coating layer is formed on the pre-curved shape.

The Future of Work: Jobs of the Future Must Be People Power In the United States, it's widely believed that the "invisible hand" of the market is the best way to allocate resources. Those who can work the most efficiently will be the ones who rise to the top of the socioeconomic pile. The market is supposed to be a level playing field, so long as everyone is considered equal participants. But this is not the only option. Others believe that the market approach is problematic for many reasons. For one, the market is a top-down process. The market is a limited scope of choices where all participants are presumed to have similar economic resources and expectations. But there are many who don't have the same resources as others and many who do not want to work for others. The view that the market should not dominate, and that we need alternatives, is shared by many. That's why many of us are attracted to the idea of collaborative work. For many, this means self-organizing systems and networks where
