But despite the increased costs, the years of pre-need trouble and maintenance, many Americans don't plan on buying into the auto-buying industry when they retire. In fact, only 19 percent of Americans intend to buy a car while still working full-time, according to UBS Global Investment Research. The Naughty or Nice Report published by UBS also found that 24 percent of Americans will wait until after their 65th birthday to purchase a vehicle, and only 10 percent of Americans expect to upgrade their current vehicle beyond two years from now. If this trend continues, automakers' estimates of future vehicle sales will also be off. According to the Detroit Auto Show, 2018 U.S. new vehicle sales will reach 17.8 million vehicles, compared to the last record of 17.4 million in 2011. The report found that the appetite for new vehicle purchases will peak in 2026, likely due to more of the 55+ population having money for new vehicles, but 60 percent of Americans will be driving three-year-old vehicles by that time. The state of vehicle sales in the United States has been on a steady decline over the past several years as global vehicle sales have leveled off and then dropped
