the Navajo reservation near Hart Park to Farmington, New Mexico, the largest city on the Navajo reservation. The pipeline would travel across state lines, carry water through densely populated areas of metropolitan Albuquerque and increasingly, the eastern corridor of the metro area, and terminate in downtown Albuquerque. AD AD A New Mexico State Water Commission study concluded that 24 billion gallons of water — roughly 20 percent of the Albuquerque metro area's supply — could be lost to the Rio Grande if the pipeline project were built. The commission asked that the water be brought through the eastern corridor instead. The state legislature and the U.S. Congress appear sympathetic to these concerns, but state and federal regulators are moving forward with the project. The House of Representatives' natural resources committee gave the project a hard look last week. The Energy and Natural Resources Committee heard testimony on the project Wednesday and took up the matter with a hearing this morning. Democratic representative Deb Haaland has opposed the

The goal of the game is to reach a platform to collect the final medal and to escape from the Kingdom of Bones in this top down perspective view game. You will be able to see your own camera angle and where the necessary actions will take place at the same time. The camera is unchangeable to certain degrees. There are also special actions that can be performed in order to ruin the plans of the enemy. Through these you will be able to win against the skeletons and skeleton lords. You can use two types of attacks to ruin the plans of the enemy. You can use the dynamite and the catapults to destroy skeletons and destroy the enemy lords with the cannonballs. You will need to use these attacks very carefully because there are also cannons which can shoot you from the outside, or kick you which will kill you instantly. You will have to think very deeply to survive and to destroy all enemies to win the game. Lots of enemies are waiting and they can kill you at any time. To collect the trophies you will have to think a lot to dodge cannons balls and using the catapults, or kill your enemies. You will have to be careful to kill the skeletons and skeleton lords before they kill you or poison you. You can destroy all skeletons and skeleton lords to save yourself, or in case you want to collect the some of the trophies. There are lots of traps on the way to collect the medals, and if you don't destroy them, they will kill you. The game ends when you collect a medal or the time runs out. If you don't collect a medal, you will lose and your game will end. You should a good number of IESMs, and the local press, have indeed taken the initiative to question and critique this project. This has been a somewhat surprising development, as many Indonesians are broadly supportive of the PNs and their recent promises of improved livelihoods. While there is widespread discontent with the policies, and with the small, corporate donors, that are dominating the provincial budgets, it is not automatic that the local media would question PNs. Moreover, the responses by local leaders and other IESM members have managed to change the conversation from the rhetoric about 'development', particularly as the Water for Agriculture project was one of the key spokespersons of the TVI, the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, and NGOs that spearheaded the campaign. Further, the film credits the organisation Pusaka Lupa Karya (PLuK; 'screws-up production') as the sole agency behind the film. PLuK describes the project as 'pro-poor' and organized according to a 'cooperative, led and community-directed process.' In the past, these assertions have now been proven more than doubtful. The most probing and truthful critique of the campaign came from Teuku Eko Supriyanto, an IESM member and professor at Gadjah Mada University. He had just returned from work on a major archaeological project in the mid-1970s, when he witnessed the poverty figures publicized by the Indonesian Government that year of 84 per cent and even higher in East Java. Subsequently, his classes witnessed a renewed interest in the studies of the colonial period, and he began working on a PhD thesis on the suffering and poverty faced by the natives in Lampung province. As he explains: When I was teaching in the 1980s, I used to tell students a little bit about our struggle with controlling the prices of our rice (there was a severe inflation in the 1970s and 1980s). But I wanted to be properly informed on a wider issue - not just the economic policy of the Government, but also the role

Room of the Futons is a short, funny and adorable game about a young woman who is trapped in her father's basement. I guess his idea of a "quiet" basement is rather noisy, but hey, that's why he's sleeping upstairs. Inspired by The Little Prince, Room of the Futons is a joyful short game and a wonderful story about creativity. Play it at home with the Kinect, on the go with your smartphone, or on your TV using the One Remote to play anywhere. All the main characters of the game: the protagonist, the boy, the kitten, the whistle and the island are recreated with Kinect. *Game Discontinued as of 10/26/2014
