The image editing tools that work in Photoshop are similar to those in CorelDraw, but Photoshop's features are not quite so robust. Fireworks is a vector-based graphics and layout program that has become increasingly popular because it does not support raster images. This is a very important feature when working with images that represent photographs or illustrations. Fireworks uses a grid of vectors. These vectors are easily resized and resampled (as discussed in the section "Resampling," earlier in this chapter). Fireworks supports a number of advanced features, including 3D graphics, creation and manipulation of Flash (SWF) animations, and animation. Adobe encourages Fireworks to be used by professionals as well as by beginners because of its features and ease of use. CorelDraw offers three toolsets: • PointPlus | The standard drawing tools --- | --- • PhotoPlus | The enhanced drawing tools for working with digital photography • and PhotoStudio | The image management tool If your budget is tight, the CorelDraw software package is an ideal solution. It is a bundle that includes software, education, and a Web site. PointPlus is essentially a toolbox for drawing, with many drawing tools and operators. Like Adobe Illustrator, PointPlus features a bezier curve, selection, and stroke tools, and supports 2D and 3D drawings. PhotoPlus offers enhanced drawing tools, plus some image and audio editing tools, and is geared toward digital photography. It includes point-based drawing tools and a few advanced drawing and selection tools. CorelPhotoStudio is very similar to Photoshop, except that it's designed for working with photos and videos. It includes image editing, image composition, effects, photo red-eye reduction, color correction, a scanner, and a few other tools. CorelDraw is a popular tool, but its cost makes it a less-than-ideal investment. Use the test-drive Web site to get an idea of how the program works before making a purchase. Adobe Illustrator is one of the most popular graphic design programs in the world and is the industry standard for working with vector images. In recent years, Adobe has been including more image-editing tools in its programs, making it more like a hybrid program. But because Illustrator is designed to work with r

Q: How can I get rid of my freeloader friend? I'm in a medieval RPG game. My character is about 90 hp. My 3 party members are close to dead. And a newbie - a wizard with 150 hp joins the party after my 3 were killed. He does nothing to help. It gets worse. My PC is mostly unused. The most I got out of him was his library which has all the spells he has learned so far. He's really useless. How can I get rid of him? A: Tell the party to retreat. They get a readjustment of PC duties. The wizard can keep his. The other members lose or experience less negative reactions than normal. The wizard can stay where he is. If the wizard is your best friend, then really really try to get him to go back where he came from. If you have unneeded, under used party members, it's often better to make them lose XP than have them sit around at 0 HP (although a missing hand, or leg, or other body part is not an instant death sentence). A: This a bit of an unusual situation. If the wizard says he needs to level up (and he does as far as I can tell; at any rate he doesn't seem to have any slot at least at the moment in my game), then the wizard's party goes down too. It's also easy to convince the wizard to leave the party; if he's not strong/fast/maneuverable and you don't plan to use him again, you can just walk away. A: What I would do is have the wizard, when he rejoins the party, roll a skill check. The odds for it are quite good, but as 2d6 is a pretty low roll, I would not need to roll very high to hit it. Perhaps a Smith's Tools, Sifting, Linguistics, Linguistics+1 skill check in one of the wizard's skill ranks. If the wizard succeeds, then the wizard goes back to his tent, and he is no longer your party member, and you can now say good riddance. If the wizard fails, then his spellcasting abilities improve. (Note: this check is not necessarily part of the wizard spellcasting system, it could be something else entirely; I'd have to look up the exact wording

Sumatran orangutan The Sumatran orangutan (Pongo abelii) is an orangutan species native to the island of Sumatra in Indonesia. Together with the Bornean orangutan, it is known for its galumphing (high-stepping) walk, which is defined by well-defined footprints high with only three toes touching the ground (unlike the four-toed footsteps of the orangutans of Borneo). The Sumatran orangutan is the second most populous, and one of the most threatened, orangutan subspecies in the world, and one of the ten most endangered primates in the world. Diet The Sumatran orangutan eats riparian forests, shrubs, herbs and acacia trees. It is a specialist folivore that has been shown to prefer the leaves of species of Acacia and Albizia trees. In general, the amount of fruit present in the diet is low. Range The Sumatran orangutan is not abundant in the wild, but is often sighted in national parks and zoological gardens. There were 220,000–340,000 orangutans in 2004. In the wild, the orangutan is confined to the upper slopes of Mount Batukaru and the Batang Toru area in Central Kalimantan, while Sumatra's southernmost point is located there as well. Physical description The Sumatran orangutan has four fingers on each hand and five toes on each foot. It has a black-fringed face and a white ring around its torso, while its eyes are golden. Females and young orangutans have shorter tufts of hair between their eyes, while males have longer ones. Orangutans in captivity are sometimes called "Sylvia" because of their long fingernails. A sylvia – a name which most zoological parks use to refer to the orangutan – is usually the male of the species, and its nail length is much longer than that of the female. Taxonomy The Sumatran orangutan belongs to the subspecies P. a. abelii. All orangutans belong to the genus Pongo, but there are several distinct species (singular: orangutan) within the genus: Pongo abelii abelii P
