More designers are turning to photo manipulation software as a way of creating sophisticated designs. So, to answer the questions that I'm sure will be asked, here's a list of some other popular graphics software programs in the industry and their places in the design world: * Paint (mac) is a graphics program from Apple. It was originally designed as a way for students to share their art and receive critiques, so it has a robust collaborative feature where students can send their work to each other and receive feedback. It has many built-in features, including vector tools, color picking, layers, and much more. Because it's designed as a platform for art and sharing, we don't use it in the design world very often. * Adobe LiveCycle Fusion Suite (mac/PC) is a suite of three free, integrated programs designed to help keep track of your own creative projects as well as sync those projects with clients and collaborators. Its robust features enable you to create and edit presentations, brochures, advertisements, and more. It was designed for small business owners and professionals who are looking to manage projects, make presentations, and share work with clients. * _The Best Kept Secrets of Graphic Designers_ (wikimedia.org/wiki/Best_Kept_Secrets),_ published by Wikimedia, is a collection of images, articles, and interviews with top designers on their favorite tools, techniques, and processes. It is the definitive resource to inspire us to learn what experts in the industry have to say about what they use in their work. * MacInDesign (mac) is a desktop publishing program designed for Macs and can import Photoshop files and image files. It also has an AppleScript interface that enables it to be controlled by other programs such as Apple's Pages, Illustrator, or Keynote. It is designed to help you create superior, professional-quality documents. * Adobe Premiere (mac) is a professional suite of graphics and video editing programs for Macs. It is Apple's take on the software industry standard for editing graphics and video.

Q: how to split a string with a substring pattern I'm trying to find a way to split a string with a certain substring pattern. For example, I want to split this string "aTZsZa" so it should return an array of size 2. The idea behind this is that, the first element in this array will be "a", and the second element will be "ZsZa". What I've tried to do was to use `strstr`, but it won't work, even if I convert it to a char array. A: `char* ptr = strstr(s, "ZsZa"); int length = (ptr - s) + sizeof("ZsZa");` A: If you want to know if a string exists in the string you're searching, use `std::strstr`. If you want to know how far it is, use `std::distance`. If you want to trim the ends of the string, you can use either `std::trim` or `trims`. If you have low self-esteem or have been rejected by someone important to you, then having a pet can be a good way to help get past the hurt and bounce back from a crushing blow. In addition to having a happier and healthier mind, you can also have a healthier, happier and more attractive body if you get enough exercise. One of the best things about a pet is that you can let them wake you up in the morning, you can pet them at night and they will come to you no matter how late at night it gets. Remember, you do not have to know how to care for a cat or dog to have one around. The same dog that sits in its sleep in front of the fire, will come to your side if your heart is broken. The first thing that you need to do in order to have a healthy relationship with your pet is to treat them well. You need to give them a good diet and treat them with love. Learning to love yourself is a great way to start having a healthy relationship with a pet. Make sure that you are eating well and exercising yourself so that you have a healthy body. You can do things like swimming or go hiking. You should also try and do something for your pet. This could include feeding

Q: Is x^k non-increasing? I'm trying to prove the following, and I know that I would want to show that for each k , the sequence x_1, x_2, \dots, x_k is non-decreasing, but I am struggling to show this. Can anyone help? A: This is the wrong approach. You want to show that x_k is non-decreasing for all k or equivalently, that $x_1 x_{k+1}$ for all k . The start of daylight saving time has caused more headaches and power outages in Calgary and Alberta. From what we've heard, the problem seems to be that people have been using more power than normal and then turning the lights back on. The issue started Sunday night and a number of people saw their lights go out for a time while the power grid was brought down, including people in Airdrie. A few people have complained on Twitter about not being able to get a power outlet in their garage or about how their power went out for a couple of hours. Power has now been restored to most of these people and we want to hear from you if you've also been affected. Why did it happen? The power disruption comes from a surge in electricity demand triggered by the change of clocks to summer time. It usually happens during the 2:00-4:00 a.m. window when there are surges in demand. It's part of a seasonal power increase due to the longer daylight hours. The power company says it's not related to the heat wave currently affecting the province. What can I do? Many people who are having a hard time getting power have called the power company and you can also call 311. The power company says the outage is mostly localized to Airdrie and Cabbagetown. The utility has told CBC News about a dozen customers in Airdrie with problems, but it says no one had a problem in Bowinnemuath, Point Grey or Cabbagetown. Power companies advise you to stay with your neighbours and not hesitate to get your neighbours to help
