Randy Blythe, the lead singer of Lamb of God, has been arrested by law enforcement in his native Czech Republic for allegedly attacking his girlfriend in the early hours of Thursday morning. According to Czech police, Blythe allegedly attacked his woman around 6:30 a.m. at her apartment while they were in the process of moving out together. They say the victim suffered scratches all over her face and neck, while her hand was reportedly broken in the incident. According to the statement from the Czech Ministry of Interior, Blythe was also charged with assaulting a police officer. The band's website has been pulled offline and replaced with a statement saying that it is "aware of the situation and is working with local authorities to ensure the immediate and safe release of Randy, to the extent possible." The statement continued, "Sadly, this is Randy's second time to find himself in an unfortunate circumstance of

While this debate has had a great deal of its supporters doing the predictable and melodramatic appeals to “the masses” or “the future of bitcoin”, there have been those, such as Arthur Hayes of BitMEX, who have done much to both set the scene, and to try to bring some forward looking analysis to the debate. Today, in a post on Twitter, Hayes produced an interesting chart that seems to show a healthy relationship between the altcoin market and the entire BTC market. It is interesting to see altcoins gaining a fair bit of traction when compared to bitcoin as a whole, and I strongly suggest that those trading cryptocurrencies begin to take
