If you choose to fly to Mars, you will be granted infinite rockets! Fly as high as you can, explore the infinite world of Mars and have your victory >)

The user interface for this game is so unique and innovative. Control player by one game button, and when touching on creature, the character will display some sounds. If the player touch solid objects, character will find the rhythm in a melody. You will have a hard time to forget this rhythm system.

If you survive, then you will be rewarded with various items which you can use to decide where to land later. Even if you die, you can take a second chance, which will refresh your life. Some players feel that this game uses unfairly passive 3D tactics, but in my opinion all gamelittles

I have function that looks like this: `function myFunction() { $("#DIV1").hide(); }` Then I have div with id #DIV1. How can I make this function work after mouseover event on the div? A: You need to apply the function to the element, not its class. `$("#DIV1").on("mouseover", myFunction).hide();` jQuery doc: The `on( events [, selector ] [, data ], handler( event, data ) )` method is the generic name for the `bind`, `live`, and `delegate` methods. As of jQuery 1.7, `on()` adds simpler event type detection for `mouseenter`, `focusin`, and `focusout` events. For backward-compatibility, you may pass the names of other event types instead of a space-separated list of types. UShourly1 a Book Published in the Twentieth Century Became a Modern Classic 23 Feb 2012 08:31:23 +0000>How gratifying it is to observe the slings and arrows of modern pundits turnarounds. Bill Nye writes an inept but well-meaning apology for creationism, then next week Bill Nye writes a condescending and acerbic polemic against Peter Atkins. Who is David to lash out at Thony Potts, who is me to lash out against a nit-picking, ridiculous, and dishonest nitwit? Who am I to take on Garrett Hardin, so easily dismissed as a fringe Internet nutbrain? I too once thought the tragedy of the commons was a serious problem, but to paraphrase the Bard, when I am wrong, I am very wrong: The tragedy of the commons is that each, for his own selfish gain, must subdue his own ethical judgment, and adopt the norms and standards of his neighbor. That's not just the problem. That's the problem. But the problem with "most people's minds," as you so deplorably put it, is not the problem. Can you imagine a situation in which perfectly rational people are as stupid as a society of snails? They might theologially complain, "What are we to do?" but unable to construct a viable answer. God has a job for us. Our work is to help "the stupid" understand what is right and what is wrong, what is sacred and what is profane. Not because the stupid are stupid, but because St. Paul commends us to "teach the idiot." At this very moment, I am presently in the presence of a most assuredly stupid man. He doesn't even realize that he is stupid. Hold

You can talk to any NPC, and use the items in the environment (like fishing poles) to interact with the environment. You can randomly discover new items and NPCs as you explore the planet. You can sell your items for a nice profit. You can decide if you want to sell your items off once in a while, or keep them for yourself. You can do favors for NPCs as well. They may keep your items for you. You can run into trouble. Some planets are home to dangerous pirates, or alien invaders. You can find other human NPCs scattered through the planet and open up romantic stories with them. As an item, you can improve your chances of getting a better treasure. As an NPC, you can get better chances of being hired as an expedition guide. Basically you are searching for rare items on an alien planet. As you find the items, you can sell them or give them away. I plan to have a main story quest, and multiple side quests that I can complete. You are free to decide which side quests you want to do, when you want to do them, and what you want to do. This project is open source. I welcome your feedback, improvements, and everything else. You can also feel free to make an account on my server if you want to try out the game.
