Pages Thursday, June 18, 2009 Trip to the Thermal Plains! First up was the deep red rock at the Walker Ranch. I am still trying to figure out how to make it grey yet manly... Down below is the Picacho dam. This was a fun hike to play on the rocks and look out over the river and trout! The river was very murky from the rocks, but it was still nice to see the fish jumping. In the background is the ranger station. Next to that you can see the road where the irrigation canal comes in. It looks kind of close to the river, but we did not see any fish. At night we sat with my photographer friend Jeffrey and listened to him play his french horn!

Q: Advice on app ID in PayPal SDK for Android I'm trying to write a simple app to collect payments using PayPal's Android SDK (The problem is that I can't figure out how to set the app ID. I've seen `PayPal.getInstance().setAppID(...)`; but that is declared as:

(void)setAppID:(NSString*)appID Sets the App ID string. Where can I find the "NSString" for App ID? A: That documentation is a little unclear, but I finally figured it out. You don't set the app ID, but the key (for the Android client configuration file). To find this key, open the configuration file for your application at: Res/values/strings.xml That file will look like this: my_application_key You need to change the element to reflect the desired key for your

More Than 300 Crypto Investors Hoped to Trade a New Commission-Free Investment Platform More Than 300 Crypto Investors Hoped to Trade a New Commission-Free Investment Platform Nearly 300 investors have already signed up to Stox.com's new commission-free trading platform in under a week. The company tells 8btc that the initial response to its platform is very positive, and so far users are taking advantage of more than 50 trading pairs, including popular cryptocurrencies, such as XRP and BCH. Stox.com has introduced an unusual strategy to drive new users into its platform. It is commission-free. It does not take a fee from users, and unlike other trading sites, Stox.com is not selling its own cryptocurrency – rather, it is a platform that provides the community with a community currency. Investors can trade more than 50 cryptocurrencies, including XRP, TRON, NEO, and Stellar. Only one trading pair has been traded so far, but Stox.com says the rest will be available “soon.” More Than 300 Investors Signed Up Users can experience Stox’s unique approach to trading by linking up with other traders. Traders can select a state that suits their skill level and enter the market. This is done by answering questions such as which coin they want to trade, how much capital they are willing to risk, and so on. Once the questionnaires are complete, users can view news articles and stock analysis from Stox.com. The platform utilizes the Star Protocol (which can be integrated with some applications) to provide users with a listing of new pairs. For example, at any time, users can create an order that automatically executes once a new pair is added. Once a pair is added, Stox.com also provides a coaching section where traders can review the new pair with the help of an experienced crypto trader. In its announcement, Stox.com indicated that more than 3,000 users have created Stox accounts so far. The Stox ICO crowd sale ran from June 25 to July 5, and raised a total of $16.4 million in USD. An additional $21 million in Stox Tokens will be issued in the future to support a variety of functions within the company. Stox.com released its platform in beta mode earlier this month, and promised that it will introduce new pairs and markets on a weekly basis. The company hopes to eventually have 100
