[ch.01] is a dungeon crawling RPG released for the Game Boy in 1990 by Nintendo. It took approximately 40 man hours to complete a quest, and used a system with 18 levels and five floors. It was one of the first games to be released as a result of Nintendo's initiatives to boost the sales of handheld consoles and given that the Game Boy offered a far more satisfying experience than its predecessor, the Famicom, the game was a great success. With the Nintendo Switch Online service, players can now relive Link's Awakening after switching on their Switch console. In a multiplayer mode, players can connect to the Nintendo Switch Online service through Local Play and play one-on-one battles with other players all over the world. When it comes to multiplayer, unlike other titles, there is no limit on the number of players. This means that the most popular titles such as Animal Crossing, Mario

Kart, Super Smash Bros. and Splatoon can be played with other players online. In addition, online communication tools such as the friend list and text chat are available for use. The system that sees the emergence of a new age. The Legend of Zelda: Link's Awakening game was first released in 1990. At that time, people had been anxiously waiting for the next generation of games consoles, and I had been working on making progress on Game Boy hardware development. When Game Boy became Nintendo's second-generation game console, the second-generation titles began appearing as well, and among them was the Link's Awakening game. I had been testing the system, developing new hardware, and testing software, and as the time for its release drew near, I was also very anxious about Link's Awakening. At the very first glance, Link's Awakening could be considered to be a sequel of sorts to the previous Legend of Zelda, since it was a game whose main genre was an action RPG. However, on the surface, the game's world was set in a realistic world. The Legend of Zelda: Link's of a human operator performing these operations as he/she has trained. On the other hand, human operators are also used as assistants to the automation system. In a traditional factory automation (FA) system, robots are employed. Generally, the product is transported to a robotic arm for assembly, and the robotic arm performs a series of pre-determined actions on the product. A worker sits at a workstation to observe the robot, for example, by using a computer to display the video image of the action being performed, and to manually operate the robot. This process of manually operating the robot can be very time consuming for the worker, and for the company. Another type of system is a factory autonomic system. In this type of system, a self-learning vehicle (SLV)
