potential risks to financial stability, the chairman of the European Central Bank said today. “It would be good if we can lay down some standards, so that we can have a better regulation, and better supervision,” said Mario Draghi at a news conference following a meeting of central bankers and finance ministers from the European Union’s 19-member states and the U.K. today. When asked if the European Union could introduce legislation, Draghi said his remarks were “just an idea” and he would have to “get more information” to see if new laws were needed. The comments came a day after the European Commission released draft legislation that would regulate cryptocurrencies. The proposals, said Commissioner for Financial Stability Vitor Caldeira, would help prevent the current lack of regulation on cryptocurrencies from becoming a problem. On Sunday, Caldeira, who is leading an ongoing five-year investigation into digital currencies and distributed ledger technology, said the regulation he is drafting would not ban cryptocurrencies, but seek to ensure their use does not harm financial stability. The common proposal, expected to be written by the end of the year, would allow cryptocurrencies to be used within specific financial and non-financial services, while “prohibiting access to financial services for entities that are not approved by the European Central Bank (ECB).”

In this connection, reference is made to U.S. Pat. No. 3,839,476 and U.S. Pat. No. 3,959,419, where 1,1-dioxaspiro[5.5]undecane compounds are reacted with (S)-1-(1'-benzylthio)-1-phenylethylamine which is substituted by an alkoxy carbonyl group at the phenylthio moiety to form enantiomeric alkyl esters and then converted to the 1-alkyl-7-phenyl heptanoate salts of the compounds to obtain an enantiomeric salt of the spiro compound. The salts are separated by chiral chromatography to obtain the desired enantiomer. Meanwhile, the technique of forming salts of an optically active amino compound with an optically active ester is already known. In this connection, reference is made to U.S. Pat. No. 4,108,875, wherein the optically active amino compound and the optically active ester are reacted to form the corresponding optically active aminoalcohol salt. This optically active aminoalcohol is then reacted with a carboxylic acid to prepare the corresponding optically active aminoacid salt. The optically active aminoacid is subsequently formed into a salt with a base. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,188,390, a method is proposed in which two optically active starting materials are converted into diastereomeric salts and the two diastereomeric salts are separated by chrom
