House Republicans will make it work "Today, the Republicans in the House of Representatives have passed the first of many steps toward repealing and replacing the Obama Administration's massive and costly health care law known as Obamacare," House Speaker Paul Ryan declared at a press conference on Wednesday. However, Ryan made clear that there will be more action yet to come in the future. In other words, House GOPers can do what they want until 15 January, when the final version of the American Health Care Act would be unveiled. "When we have all of our amendments on our bill, when the president has written his signature, then we will send it to the Senate," Ryan said. "We'll then work across the aisle with the new Democratic majority to enact this right into law." After the house passed the act, the House majority and the President will be able to work together on the final, joint version. "Today, the Senate will have its first chance to debate the American Health Care Act. We expect they will receive it in one week," Ryan said. "But it's important to note that in order to provide a transition period for individuals, it must be reviewed by committee by February 23," he added. Republicans take the first step toward repealing
