TITAN HUNTER - Dungeon Pack Free [Mac/Win] (April-2022)

I picked this up for the original $1.95. It's a great little game. Be sure to download the.OGG files. It's not really a very complicated game, but it does have a couple of speed bumps. However you can easily beat the game in about an hour. There's only two levels. If you enjoyed this game I'd recommend Xyron's game called OZMAX, that's a fun arcade blaster.

----- OZMAX is a totally new beast on the scene! With over thirty different weapons, thousands of enemies, and over a dozen game modes, OZMAX is sure to have you addicted! Fast-paced frantic shooting action, and unlimited platforming - all at an amazingly low price!... 2002-01-08 11:36:54 When playing OZMAX, you can get your paws on over 20 different kinds of weapon, including: Grapple Gun: A grenade that lets you grab onto anything and shake your enemies off! Bullseye Gun: A shotgun-like weapon that kills when the enemy gets a bead on you! Clones Gun: A machine that adds up to 30 clones of you to the battle! Wrist Rockets: Fires rocket projectiles with a stinky odor, and launches yourself through the air! Mine Gun: What good is it to be an evil emperor if you can't blow stuff up? This weapon lets you summon huge explosions and use them to your advantage! PSI Control Knife: Use the knife to activate a powerful energy field that cuts away at the enemies! High Laser Lance: The ultimate in defense, this laser sword is so powerful that you can use it in a 360° arc! Double Shoot 2-in-1: This is a unique 2-in-1 weapon that can shoot two different types of ammo at once! Hammer Gun: Lock-on with this stylish hammer and blast everything you see! AMX Baffy: Sling-shot a Baffy onto the enemy to do tons of damage! Game Features: - Over 20 Different weapons that can be used and upgraded! - Over 12 Games, all of them with tons of levels. - Lots of environment elements and explosions! - Gorgeous re-designed UI for easier interface with a joystick and keyboard! - Tons of enemy types and bosses! - Highly customizable controls with commands for: - +/- key

THE AUSTRALIAN Tax Office is warning taxpayers of a "significant" increase in interest charged on debts owing the federal government. On average, the ATO is now collecting interest on debts owed for federal government services at 9.5 per cent, up from just over 7 per cent in 2012. The figures emerged as the federal government is expected to announce today that the temporary 0.5 per cent tax cut will be extended for an extra year, amid claims it has been a "complete flop". Labor has claimed the extension will allow the Coalition to claim the credit for the 0.5 per cent cut during the next election but it will cost the budget $2 billion. The ATO said a total of $2.7 billion was now being collected in interest for the federal government but has warned that was not because of the tax cut. "This data is a little bit old, but we have seen an increase in the collection of interest on federal government debt in the last few years," a spokeswoman said. "Our analysis shows that about $2.7 billion of interest is now being collected. However, interest was not the single most significant factor in the increase." ATO figures show that the average debt being collected has risen every year since 2008 but the amount owed on average has also increased every year since 2008. The figures show debts can now be over $1 million, with the average being just under $300,000. About one-

What's new in TITAN HUNTER - Dungeon Pack:

A few years ago, the Datalogix data powerhouse extracted its revenge against The Wall Street Journal, which had highlighted (a decade before Microsoft did) the ways that “data-mining” (i.e., entry of data into a spreadsheet computer program and then the automated use of keystrokes to identify patterns in the data) might help predict upcoming sports events. The data-mining exercise by the Journal reported vague results. They simply looked at the relationship of the outcome of a particular play to the performance of a particular team in the vicinity of the play. According to the Journal, the data-mining efforts provided a “modest” prediction that the team with the highest rate of success in the vicinity of the “immediately preceding basket” was more likely to win. How does the operation of a data-mining computer allow the data company to reward the data-miners with stock options for their minutiae-analysis? Consider a simple example involving the number of “fans” for various team players during games. One day, someone entered the number of fans for various players during particular games. A data-mining program then used this data to say: “For A, the number of fans is 12 and B, the number of fans is 33. Therefore, for team A, the chance of winning is 75%.” The program can then make this claim in the daily sports headlines. If one finds large discrepancies in the numbers, one can begin to investigate other factors, such as the play on which each occur or the current league winning record. In effect, the data-mining company plugs in data from disparate sources. It is, in effect, embedding its data into the news streams. It appears that the regular use of data-mining intelligence is in the next phase of the evolution of WAR (War Against Reality). Data-mining, in fact, is nothing new. For example, when one was more familiar with television shows, one could derive any number of insights about a person’s routines from “theme nights.” If I am to gather that “Brad Pitt” always “wears black” and “Jennifer Aniston” always “wears black” (or whatever numbers I have observed about their combined routines), then I can predict their dinner or movie choices even further. New data on the choice of a movie or a restaurant provides more insight

Biafra practically dried up when Igbo became the second language. The end of Biafra was, then as now, a time of hyperbole. In the 25 years since its independence from Nigeria in 1967, Biafra may have kept its flag flying against all comers, but in the middle of that shanty town on the Bassa River, it was a thin, kewpie-doll image. Gone, for example, was the famous flag in Igbo-language letters that proclaimed a future of literature, dance and poetry. No longer would a group of nine to 12 million people and their five million slaves carry anything so effusive. Biafra's population had shrunk to 200,000, mostly the remaining slaves. The Shinkolobwe genocide barely lasted a month. On April 12, 1970, 600 soldiers and Janjaweed militiamen killed at least 10,000 Biafrans in three villages in the middle of the country. That was history's real end for Biafra. In the aftermath, we were told Biafra was bigger than ever. That year, the official estimate was that Biafra had about 600,000 square miles - seven times the size of Texas, equivalent to the area of Europe. The official census was 15.9 million people. The census was off. Biafra was there, if you saw and counted the poorest people. They lived in their mud-sheltered homes - without electricity, running water or health care - in what the whites called "the bush". These were the ones who remained, the survivors of a genocide conducted by the successive governments in Lagos, Port Harcourt and, before that, Ibadan and the Eastern
