The force with which God creates or accomplishes his will is infinite, just as the force of love is infinite. If, then, we say that in the world there is no need of God, we are saying that the force with which God accomplishes his will is still limited, but it is infinite and unlimited. (47) This concept of the infinite and unlimited force of love is perhaps no less understandable to us than the concept of God's love. We cannot make progress in our mental conceptions of love until we can understand how, and to what ends, the power with which God accomplishes his infinite will in the world is unlimited. We cannot understand even the finite and limited power of God's love until we fully understand the infinite and unlimited power with which God has revealed himself to us in Christ. All this leads up to the last point of this section, that is
