Sent e-mail from my iPhone to my android with SFTP credentials. They are specified in "Authentication" section of the "Local Authentication" config. Unable to get the SSH public key from the iPhone. Do they have to have the same fingerprint? What else can be the problem? A: The iPhone configuration is probably wrong (or something is wrong with your SFTP credentials). To add a public key that someone can use, as a friend said, you should add the public key to the iPhone configuration (and possibly password, too). In the server config, you can see that under "Authentication", there is a "Local Authentication", which is for your local credentials. Under that are "public key authentication" and "private key authentication". The "private key authentication" is for placing the private key on the server. If you don't do that, anyone could login with your phone. The "public key authentication" is for adding the public key to the phone's configuration (or password) so that you can share with other users (and have your application work even if they don't use an iPhone or Android). If you are using a commercial hosting site, they can probably help you get the public key on the phone. But that is outside the scope of this question.

At present, the government is facing resistance from Trinamool Congress (TMC) over demonetisation and the government's handling of the nation's economic growth that hit a five-year low of 5.7 per cent. According to the survey report, 66 per cent Indians have a positive view on PM's personality, while 59 per cent of the people believe he has performed well in implementing his government's policies. While 69 per cent believed that the government was handling the economy well, the popularity of the government and its policies in the past year fell from 64 per cent in November 2015. However, compared to the 63 per cent positive score polled for B.J.P's UP Chief Minister Akhilesh Yadav,
