The person who wrote a story that includes a spider trying to kill the main character and a melting face has been exposed as a "weirdo". Advertisements It's okay Stephen King. You're just a weirdo. Everyone knows that Stephen King was born in Maine. Actually he's from Bangor, but still, the guy lives in Maine! What makes that so bizarre is that he's supposedly raised by a narcissistic mother who is rather good at controlling and manipulating him. Yet in the past few days, Stephen King seems to have been revealed as a serial liar of the first order. I've been telling you all along that it's only a matter of time before King is exposed for the fraud he is. He's a bad guy, plain and simple. His past books and movies are packed with examples of bad writing and plot holes that can't be overcome with magic and dimension hopping. At least there is one truth to King. I really enjoy his books and movies, but he's just a really bad writer who can't even write a good book. It's hard to believe that he can even open a bottle of coke with his own hands. But now, the proof has come to light. The story is about a boy named Joe who is also a spider. This is odd enough, but it's even stranger when you remember how the story ends. At the end of the story, Joe the spider is consumed by a huge hive of bees who then fill his body with honey and make him their monarch. The boy Joe is then eaten by the queen, and what's left of the boy is the queen's child. That's the end of the story. Spiders. Bees. What a weirdo. Stephen King. I'm starting to understand why people hate him. So when a book comes out titled "It", I'm not surprised. Here's the cover of the book.

Anyways, this book 6d1f23a050
