Walk East from the first floor to the Bostock building and you will come to the parking lot and gangway to Perkins and the PHSC. Stand on the left side of the carrel and you will be on the research side of the building. Maybe it wasn't obvious before, but there are indeed a ton of online program and publisher provided software options to choose from. Here is a small sampling of easy to use programs. Or, check out GoToMeeting or BigBlueButton . Both are free and have affordable monthly pricing. If you are looking for something more robust, check out TeacherLedger , iStudying , Camtasia , and Huddletogether . All of these programs are affordable for a school or professors budget and come with lots of features. Often, they can even offer onsite evaluation. In the case of serious online learning assessment, it is often beneficial to deploy a moderated discussion forum to address learners questions. You may need to spend more money on ancillary services like video moderation in order to make the forum a useful learning tool. That said, there are free programs that would allow you to build this into your course! Personally, I like using Webuy.tv which provides a free forum with moderation capabilities. In addition, this program has mobile apps, so you can keep a visual eye on things whenever you need to. Alternatively, you may want to consider a more robust studio microphone such as the Rode Podcaster. Going with this option, you may wish to include a boom arm to mount the mic to your desk. This configuration is a bit more expensive (around $350 total for mic and arm) but provides exceptional audio quality. As a side benefit, this certainly puts the online professor into recording mode when you pull the microphone boom arm over in front of you. As a user of a system like this, there is a lot to be said for the level of focus that a good microphone brings to your workflow.

Another great feature that Camtasia Studio gives you is the ability to make videos. Although you may have a digital certificate or a real camera on site, students really do not want to sit with you or an instructor and have to look at your face to interact. While they may want to talk with you, they don't want you to talk at them. Video allows students to interact with your body language and facial expressions as well as voice and allow them to see your emotions if needed. We have partnered with Pearson on many of our initiatives, like the course review, to provide support. Although we have an amazing team that knows how to build a course, it is sometimes hard to know how to make an effective course review. It turns out, making a great review of a great course is no easy task. Fortunately, Pearson has an amazing team of instructional designers who use their experience and expertise to create amazing reviews for our students. Recently, we've partnered with a team at Pearson to provide assistance on developing a review process. We've conducted several workshops with Pearson design teams to better understand how to create a review process that was authentic, relevant, and congruent with the goals of a course. During a workshop on developing course reviews, the Pearson team presented a video to our online team. For those of you familiar with the video, it was the one used in our presentation. As a result of this experience, one of our developers in our online team created a prototype that includes a part of our course review that was based on the Pearson team's video. Today, students taking an online course can now use this prototype to view student reviews of their course. These reviews are offered through our course review area of the Bootcamp Marketplace - teaching students how to build and manage their online presence. 5ec8ef588b
