With the price of gas reaching a historical all-time low and analysts predicting a brief price hike toward the end of the year, below is a list of possible gas fillup stations that should be on everyone's list. Each of these stations has links to their Facebook pages where you can keep up with the latest promotions, read customer reviews, find out what makes them the best station in the area, and so much more. Below are some of the station's Best Practices and some popular promotions as well as some other helpful information, the full list is in the blog post. Krispy Kreme: What makes Krispy Kreme better than other gas stations? Several reasons. First of all, the service is excellent. They have the largest selection of items for you to pick from, including a wide array of breakfast foods like waffles, French toast, pancakes, and much more. Second, their drive-up window is the fastest in the area. If you have to wait a few minutes in line you may as well have a hot meal while waiting and a number of stations have had shut downs in the last few months due to unpaid bills. Krispy Kreme is one of the better stations in town, so don't hesitate to head there. - The "Eagle Fuel Station" Facebook page Below is a list of items, prices, promotions, and other information about their drive-up menu.

when used from the command line, this function will download `http://url/to/source` and return the contents of the url in `a` and `b` variables. if `a` and `b` are present in the function-argv, the function will return their values. if the downloaded file is a directory, the user will be prompted for each component of the url in turn. at each prompt, the user may select to (a) download the url component, (b) cancel and do nothing, or (c) continue and get the next component. note that the user may click enter to select a directory that is not present in the url. if a url has no components, the user will be prompted to select a directory. in this case, the user may click enter to leave the function and terminate. the command line will not exit, though, and will stay in the command prompt for the user to issue another command. if a directory is selected for downloading, the contents will be downloaded. if a url is specified for downloading, the contents will be downloaded and the user will be prompted as in the standard case, with the following differences: the `-d` flag will be used when prompting for a directory. the `-f` flag will be used when prompting for a url. `!update ###`
