If you are using a directional antenna, you can improve the coverage and speed of the WIFI network by adjusting the angle and distance of the antenna from your router. For example, while the exact angle of a quarter-wave antenna is 45 degrees, it should be at or below the plane of the roof. The antenna height should be approximately half the distance from the tallest point of the home and just above the roof line. If you purchased a wireless extender, it has been configured to add your router as an access point. Add your device and restart the router. Your new extender has added your router as an AP and provided an additional WIFI signal to devices within your home or office. If you have access to your APN setting for your main wireless router, you can use it. To do this, go to Configure in the WIFI web interface, click on the "APN" tab, and enter the appropriate settings as listed below (Enter your device's APN settings in the line below): Updated with new screenshots from OpenWrt 21.02. To build a simple Wi-Fi repeater (a device that extends the same Wi-Fi network's coverage) it's a good choice to use the same Wi-Fi network name (SSID) as the one of your main router along with encryption, Password, and so on. This ensure the wireless devices connected to your (wider) network will automatically stay connected to the best Wi-Fi network. Alternatively, you can also choose to have a different SSID name/encryption/Password. Setting up a Wi-Fi network at this stage is not necessary if you just want a Wifi bridge. ie.
