the app also offers a social tab, where you can see what your friends are up to and which of their devices they're using at any given time. when you send a notification to a friend's pushbullet app, it's also possible to send a notification to your friends. pushbullet is not for everyone. the app, kwaterski says, is for users who want to share files and messages between all of their devices. but the app is not for people who like to keep data out of the cloud, because when the app gets a push notification on your phone, it does automatically share that notification with any other devices connected to your account. the best thing about pushbullet is that it does not require you to install third-party apps on your devices, like email clients and file managers. with pushbullet, you can do all the same things you do in those apps, from sending and receiving emails to sharing files and even taking notes. pushbullet is a free app that allows you to share email, files and texts between your android devices and your computer. the app is free, but features a limited number of messages and can not be used to send sms messages. pushbullet is pretty advanced. its a great tool to have on your mac. it will make your workflow a whole lot easier. if you would like to try it out, you can download it for free on your android and your mac. you can also download noti to get notifications on your mac. you can configure pushbullet to send notifications to your desktop, tablet or phone. you can receive calls, sms and mms

on your desktop. you can also read and reply to your texts from your desktop or tablet. you can even reply to your whatsapp, hike, facebook and twitter messages from your desktop. make use of pushbullet's smart features and set it up for notifications to be received on your desktop and other device.
