A cardiac electrophysiological study (EPS) is a diagnostic procedure used to evaluate the location and electrophysiology of cardiac arrhythmias. In this article we describe the use of high fidelity ultrasound imaging (Real Time Ultrasound, ET 12 / PF 23 probes) for cardiac electrophysiological study using anatomical landmarks to guide the placement of fine bipolar electrophysiology needles and radio frequency (RF) ablation lesions. Most electrophysiology procedures were performed on patients with suspected or previous ventricular arrhythmias. The feasibility, diagnostic accuracy and safety of this technique was assessed using all four quadrants of the heart, in a single contiguous plane. Between March 1997 and June 1999, 52 patients (mean age: 47 +/- 13 years) were studied. High fidelity ultrasound guided cardiac electrophysiology could be accomplished in 48 (92%) of the patients studied, with a total of 29 targeted hemispherical, 12 bipolar, and 14 linear endocardial RF ablation lesions performed. In 4 (8%) of the patients, the ultrasound catheter was placed in the correct site but was placed incorrectly. The diagnostic accuracy for detecting localisation of the arrhythmia was high in 51/52 (98%) patients; there were 4 false negative studies. In 2 patients, catheters were erroneously placed in the coronary sinus and in the left ventricular outflow tract. The location of the catheter in the left atrium was inaccurate in 1 patient. Overall, ultrasound guided high fidelity catheter placement was 100% successful. Ultrasound guided cardiac electrophysiology can be performed safely and accurately by a variety of cardiologists in a wide range of patients, including children and patients with prior cardiac surgery. Earlier this month, President Obama made a big splash on the issue of immigration reform by releasing his long-awaited speech. In addition to talking about the issues, f988f36e3a
