The canvas is divided into three main areas: the Layers palette, the channels and the toolbox. The Layers palette, which is seen on the left hand side, is the dividing line between the artistic and non-artistic areas of an image. It is basically a place to organize all of the layers in an image. An image can have a number of

The right side of the Layers palette is the toolbox, which is where tools such as brushes, color, shapes, etc. that are used to create effects and create new images reside.
