GuideMaker is designed to organize all your PDF and HTML documents into one convenient offline guide for your mobile device. It is meant to be the ultimate document organizer whether you are looking for a quick guide to a certain topic or a more comprehensive manual for your electronics projects. Features such as headings, tables of contents, alternate text, bold, italic, bullets, headings and more make it easy to print your guide as a booklet or convert it to other formats. There are many travel guide servers on the web offering valuable information. But information are probably divided to many pages linked each other. When travelling it's suitable carry as compact guide books as possible. GuideMaker downloads online HTML documents to offline SQL database, concatenates documents and exports them for printer. It enables printing extremly slim guides especially if are printed double sided 4 pages on one sheet of paper. Get Guide Maker and give it a go to see what it's all about! A: There is a great table of contents generator for HTML at Mark Pilgrim's site. It's called TOC Generator. It even generates HTML that is very close to a normal HTML book as in the following screenshot: A: There is a pretty good web application called Factbook that I use quite a bit, that will generate a HTML table of contents based on either XML or JSON files that are downloaded from the relevant wikis. It's in PHP, but easy enough to modify to work in whatever language you prefer.

If $\epsilon\in\mathbb{N}_0$, then $x^{\epsilon}\in\mathbb{N}_0$. How to prove this using formal proofs? A: Suppose $x=7m$ for some $m\in\mathbb{N}_0$. Then $$x^\epsilon=7^\epsilon\cdot m^\epsilon=7^{1+\epsilon}\cdot m^\epsilon.$$ Now notice that $7^{1+\epsilon}\cdot m^\epsilon\in\mathbb{N}_0$ because $7^{1+\epsilon}\cdot m^\epsilon=7\cdot7^{\epsilon}\cdot m=7\cdot7^{1+\epsilon}m$. Q: Sharepoint 2010 & WPF: How to add 'Share' button to Ribbon I need to add share to my webpart - i.e. somewhere in the Ribbon - in order to allow the user to click it and choose to send the current page to a "Facebook", "Twitter", "Email" or "Linkedin" share. I'm using Visual Studio 2010,.NET 4.0, C# and SP 2010. Any suggestions? A: You should be able to create a custom SharePoint ribbon button by creating a *.tlb file that contains the SharePoint button icons. You can find this on the Internet in many places. Here is one link that includes a screenshot that describes the process. Title: Heart of Darkness Author: Joseph Conrad Genre: Fantasy/Romance/History/Hardbo
