The ability to spot patterns in maps and deep learning are helping to expedite the transition to a future Age of Autonomous vehicles. One of the latest AI-powered trials from the US Department of Transportation (DOT) last month actually saw imitation vehicle drivers take the wheel and drive themselves around a closed course, navigating real-world obstacles as they see them. Three drivers on BMW ARTEe vehicles took on the role of "captors" - they would tell the vehicle how to behave, while "caged" drivers rode serenely in the back of the vehicle. The end result? The "caged" drivers were accidentally steered into the path of an obstacle. "The whole process was an impressive demonstration of driver autonomy. The engagement between the human caged driver and the AI captor was seamless.
