I'd like to know if a visitor has visited the site, and/or purchased something and currently still visiting it, even if they later come back. In fact, I want to know the visitor's 'customer ID' so I can send them off an email after they have spent time on the site, but before they leave. I am not looking for a simple cookie solution (unless it's really simple, like but I'd like to know if I can get the visitor's IP address (probably using $_SERVER['REMOTE_ADDR']), plus their customer ID (maybe using a custom database table). A: Maybe you can use the $_SERVER['HTTP_X_FORWARDED_FOR'] to get the client's ip address. But this will mean you need a dynamic ip solution, like CloudFlare Brazil's Congress this month overwhelmingly approved a measure that would block those under 18 from viewing online material considered obscene under national law. The country's president, Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva, signed it into law yesterday. The law makes it illegal for anyone under the age of 18 to use a computer to access any material deemed obscene by a local court. Exceptions to this rule include teachers, priests and any organization that is working to prevent children from viewing pornography. Initially proposed by the Justice Ministry, the law was approved on September 13 by the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. It includes an educational component, stating that children should be taught about the dangers of viewing obscene materials and the effects it can have on their mental and physical health. One of the most controversial aspects of the law is that it defines pornography as a material that "objects or stimulates sexual relations or excites lust and that shows in a way capable of generating, directly or indirectly, the natural or the fictitious sexual relations." The law is seen as an effort to protect Brazilian children from indecency on the Internet, which has been growing in popularity in recent years. Brazilian Internet traffic now exceeds the amount generated by local and international television, according to a survey by Internet service provider Yacows, which showed that 87 percent of
