Their implementation is excellent, and arguably impracticable, for a few reasons. First, you can choose a whole or a picture at a time for the Lightroom 5 update: image files that are in your catalog, image files on your local computer, or even image files on a network server, and you can add and remove those files, as well as their associated metadata, to make sure you have the exact files you want. This process is automatic, so you don't need to perform any searches. Once you've got the files set to sync, you won't need to think about it again until you jump back to the desktop copy. In fact, on step two, you are guided through the process step-by-step, so you can be sure that your image files are precisely as you placed them. (You can also skip the step-by-step.) If you're already planning to add or edit data for the image files, you'll have to do so beforehand as well. Before the update occurs, you must sign in on your desktop computer and go to : <> > Preferences > Advanced > Device Settings and choose your phone or tablet from the list of compatible devices. On Lightroom CC, you need to perform the same process on your File Management window. These maps hold all the devices your photos have been synced to or edited on. Once filing and device setting have been completed, you can begin the actual Lightroom 5 update: click the violet cogwheel icon at the bottom right of the window, then choose <>. The Import Workflow pane appears, ready for you to choose the location and select the files (or the Folders in some cases) that you want to update. Then you can start using the updated program.
